About the Baker Neighborhood & BHNA

BAKER got its name in the 1970s from Baker Junior High School (which stood near today's Denver Center for International Studies). The school, originally West Junior High, was renamed in 1926 to honor James H. Baker, third president of the University of Colorado.

BHNA – the Baker Historic Neighborhood Association – is a Denver Registered Neighborhood Organization serving residents and property owners from 6th Ave. to Mississippi Ave., and from Lincoln St. to the S. Platte River.

Baker is home to approximately 6000 residents, as well as major industrial and commercial uses, the Alameda and Broadway RTD Light Rail stations, I-25 and U.S. Routes 6 and 85, plus tracks for three major railroad lines and part of a switching yard. Baker is perhaps Denver's only neighborhood containing a winery (Infinite Monkey Theorem), a brewery (Breckenridge) and a distillery (Stranahan's). The southern portion of the Santa Fe Arts District extends into Baker along Santa Fe Dr. & Kalamath St.

A 30-block area within Baker became a Denver Historic Landmark District in 2000. Along Broadway, the Mayan Theatre, the First Avenue Hotel and Fire Station 11 hold individual Denver Landmark designations.

Mass transportation has long influenced Baker's development. From 1881 until the 1893 silver crash, the narrow-gauge Denver Circle Railroad brought passengers south from 6th & Inca with turns at 3rd Ave., Cherokee St. and Bayaud Ave. before passing east of Broadway. From 1888 until 1950 the Denver Tramway Company ran streetcars on Broadway. Streetcars also ran on Kalamath, Galapago and W. 1st Ave. until the late 1940s.
